Longtime Employee, John King, Retires from Hub Pen Company

BRAINTREE, MASSACHUSETTS (September 3, 2014) – It was a sad but joyous occasion as Hub Pen Company honored one of its most respected and dedicated employees, John King, during his recent retirement celebration. Over the past 13 years, he has held positions as a quality control supervisor and proofreader. King joined the Hub Pen family at the age of 76 and will be turning 90 in November.

“We could always count on John to be at work every day – even during nor’easters that kept others at home,” said Joseph Fleming, President. “Now that’s dedication!”

King attended Roxbury Latin School in Boston, MA but left during his senior year to enroll in the United States Army Air Force (USAAF). During World War II he received extensive meteorology and radar training and was the director of ground control approach at Keflavik Air Station, Iceland. Upon returning home, King attended Harvard University and graduated with a math degree in 1948. Soon afterwards he married, started a family and had a successful career as a businessman. King is a longtime member of the Stone Horse Yacht Club in Harwich Port, MA and continues to serve on the race committee.

Looking back King is impressed by how much the company has grown while still retaining a warm, family-like atmosphere. He remains grateful for the opportunity that Hub Pen has provided and we consider ourselves lucky to have had him.
